

STEP ONE: Ask Yourself...

Is my relationship healthy?

- 1) Do I feel respected, cared for, and nurtured by my partner?
- 2) Does my partner support my parenting?
- 3) Does my partner openly communicate with me when there are problems?

Is my relationship unhealthy?

- 1) Does my partner shame or humiliate me in front of the kids or in private?
- 2) Has my partner threatened me or the children?
- 3) Has my partner threatened to call the “authorities” to keep control of me and the children?
- 4) Has my partner ever used or threatened to use a weapon against me?
- 5) Has my partner forced me to have sex when I didn’t want to?

STEP TWO: Are My Children Affected?

Children who witness one parent hurting another:

- 1) Are more likely to have learning and behavior problems.
- 2) Are at greater risk for child abuse.
- 3) Experience chronic health problems.

STEP THREE: Help Your Children

- 1) Let them know that one parent hurting the other is not their fault and keep an open door for when children want to talk.
- 2) Stay connected to your children and listen to them. Your relationship with them is the most important thing to keep them on track.
- 3) Consult your care providers such as teachers, doctors, school counselors if your children’s behavior concerns you and ask for a referral to programs that help victims of domestic violence.

STEP SIX: Safety Planning

- 1) Teach your kids to get help if you or they are in danger by talking to teachers, neighbors, relatives, calling 911, etc. and create a safety plan with your children: “Don’t ever try and stop the fighting. Go to your room or neighbor’s house, like we planned.”
- 2) Prepare an emergency kit in case you have to leave suddenly with: money, checkbook, keys, medications, change of clothes, and important documents.
